AN ARAB TALE SHOWING THAT WISE MEN MAKE MISTAKES.

Pate of the Wise Man Who Took Advantage of the Foolisiness of the Seven Poor Idiots-They Kept Their Contract, but the Wise Man Was Not Pleased.

One of Daukha's favorite stories is the following ingenuous legend. Once upon a time seven simpletons were going along a road. And behold they came to a big puddle of rainwater which lay still and bright under the sky. And looking into the puddle they could see the clouds reflected far below, and wisely concluded that the puddle was very deep. Whereat they were much puzzled as to how they should get across. But the eldest eimpleton, who was the boldest of the party, said: "Let us make a string, each holding the dhoti of the man in front of him, and I going first. And I will leap as far as I can, and do you others follow me." So they all leaped together into the puddle and got safely across; not, however, without being covered with mud from head to

When they were safely on the other side it suddenly occurred to the eldest simpleton that one of their number was missing. having evidently been drowned in the puddle. So he counted once, twice, thrice. But as he left himself out each time, the result each time was that there were only six simpletons. So he bid each count in turn, and as each counted after the fashion of the eldest simpleton, each found that the number was six. And yet they could not for the life of them make out who was missing. And they were much dismayed and perplexed.

At this juncture there came to them a wise man, and to him they told their doubts and difficulty. And looking at their simple faces and the shallow puddle wherein they had muddled themselves, he saw his way to profit by their foolishness. So with an air of much urbanity, he promised to restore the missing simpleton if all seven would agree to work for him a year and a day without payment, to which they gladly consented. On this the wise man, taking a betel nut, cut it in seven pieces and bid the simpletons count the pieces, which they did, and behold they were seven. Then to each man be gave a piece and asked, "How can ye be six, when to each I have given betel, and there were seven pieces of betel?" Whereat their minds were much relieved, and they began to toll with and work for the wise man.

Now the labor of simpletons is a trial to wise men, and so the event proved in this case. The first task they performed was the harvesting of the winter rice. They reaped and bound and brought thesheaves home, and asked the wise man where they should put them. But the wise man was occupied with his own thoughts and said, "Ask my old woman, and put them where she says." So they went to the old woman and asked her. But the old woman was busy cooking her husband's dinner. So she cried: "Drat you and your sheaves! Put them on my Which without any hesitation they all did, so that the dinner was spoiled and the old woman died, being smothered by the paddy. And when the wise man came in hungry and asked for his wife the simpletons told him what had happened. And when he was vexed they asked him with simple faces why he was angry with them for obeying orders.

Then the wise man, seeing no remedy, bid them go and bury the old woman. So they made a sledge of bamboos, and putting the old woman on it, started off like the wind, so as to get home the quicker to supper. But they went so fast through the bamboo grove that the old woman was | rate mechanism.-Quarterly Review. swept off the sledge by a bamboo spike.

But this they did not perceive, for as soon as they got to the place their one thought was to get a grave dug as fast as possible. To this work, accordingly, they addressed themselves. And when the grave was ready, behold, the old woman was gone. And they said: "This is a very wicked old woman. Her husband orders her to be buried, and look, she is not dead at all, but has run away. What are we to do now?" So they looked about them.

Now, there was another old woman herding cattle close by, and seeing that they could not go home to supper without obeying orders and burying an old woman, they buried her in spite of her screams and struggles. And then they came home and tolo the wise man what they had done.

The next day the wise man bid the seven simpletons go and plow above the great bauian tree, meaning higher up the hill. But they set to work conscientiously to haul the oxen and plows into the top of the tree with ropes. But the ropes broke and the oxen were killed. And again they told the wise man what they had done. And when he cursed them for a pack of fools they again pleaded that they had only done as they were told.

And many other things they did, always by the wise man's orders, until the wise man could stand it no longer. So he told the simpletons that he wanted to make a dugout canoe, and that they must cut down a simul tree for the purpose. "But," he said, "if it falls on the ground it will break, and then where will my canoe be? When ye see the tree tottering to its fall, run ye under it and receive it on your shoulders." To which they agreed, and when the tree fell they ran under it, and were duly killed-all except one, who, being the strongest, stood ready to receive the trunk. For the branches kept the trunk off the ground and saved this sim-

And he, seeing his brothers dead, was possessed with rage, and taking up the ax cut the wise man's head off, which proves that even a single simpleton is a match for a wise man if he have but an ax in his hand.-Allahabad Pioneer.

CURSE OF THE EVIL EYE.

Belief in Its Malignant Influence Is of Very Ancient Origin.

There is no superstitious belief of the human race which is so widely held as the gods supposed to dwell in the subaqueous belief in the existence and malevolent | caverns.-Washington Star. power of the evil eye. It is everywhere known and finds a place in the folklore of all nations. The apparent cause is always the same-that power of fascination by the human eye which is now known as hypnotic force, which a primitive age could imagine to be nothing but a demon residing in and speaking from the human eye. So forcible did this thought seem to the mind of the ancients that the eye and the soul were convertible terms in ancient

Even in this day of advanced human knowledge there are many things connected with the influence of mind upon mind that are not fully understood, hence it is no wonder that they proved the possession of demoniac powers to the mind of him who attributed everything which he could not understand to some supernatural agency. If the thing was not only mysterious but bewildering the first thought was to attribute it to diabolism of some kind. If the influence went so far as to control the will of another, then it became witchcraft, and the one exercising it was a witch. Everywhere was the belief that the souls of the dead could enter into and animate the living. Their essence was considered as controlling those into whom they entered, and the sign of their presence was the glittering eye, scmething like that with which the Ancient Mariner holds "the wedding guest" in Coleridge's "Rime." These glittering eves. in the great or the small, were counted as sure marks of an indwelling presence. In the great it was divine; in the mean it was a sure sign of an evil eye, or in other words a demoniac possession. In like manner the glitter in the eyes of the good indicated the possession of beneficent virtues, while the same glitter in the eyes of the malevolent indicated maleficent diabolism.

The key to the theory is the possession of that power known as fascination, whereby a mere look makes one man ready to do the will of another instead of his own. This power in the eye in all folklore is attributed to either souls or demons, which are supposed to swarm around us in almost infinite number. These souls are everywhere, and a large proportion of them are not only supposed to be malevolent, but to be possessed of considerable power for working ill to those who offend them.

The folklore tales are full of stories about the operation of the evil eye and of recipes for defense against its power. A large proportion of these are connected with the use of fire or the color of red, that being in all magic the equivalent of fire. This supposed value arises from the old worship of the sun or from the hatred which all evil things are thought to have of the fire which is to consume them in the pit of woe. A red string about the neck or arm is the most ordinary device, but red berries as of the "rowan tree," or mountain ash, are still more highly prized. Among the Scandinavian nations, the Scotch, and particularly with the gypsies, the rowan tree has a standing of its own, apart from its use in connection with the evil eye. That special meaning reaches back to the old pagan faith and need not be considered here. In Italy and among the Latin races generally the horseshoe, or its equivalent, is chiefly relied upon to counteract the influence of the evil eye. If a horseshoe is not at hand a forked twig, or even the fingers of the hand parted, is counted of great value.-Chicago Times.

Men Are Living Beyond Their Means. I remember opening my eyes to their widest extent when I was told by the late Mr. Lyon, who had charge of the credits of one of our magnificent dry goods palaces, that he had on his books 14,000 different accounts, some settled monthly, some quarterly, some semiannually, some once a year and a select few when it pleased them. See what an immensity of capital is required for 14,000 accounts, even if each was in the vicinity of $500 alone. Some of them run into the hundreds and far up into thousands. This can be traced by analogy to the smaller stores, to the butchers, bakers, confectioners, jewelers, coal dealers, to livery stable keepers, shoemakers, the hatters and the tailors. Men are living far beyond their means because the luxuries of the past they must enjoy day in and day out; expenses which to our fathers would have seemed phenomenal are to us the ordinary output.-Joseph Howard in New York Recorder.

The Utility of the Rattle.

The utility of the rattle to the rattlesnake is a problem still awaiting solution. It has been supposed to be useful as paralyzing its prey through terror excited by the sound thus induced. But this is a very doubtful explanation. It is akin to the notion formerly entertained that serpents had a power of fascinating other creatures. Others have thought that it seems to excite the curiosity of animals, and so brings them within the rattlesnake's reach. It has also been supposed that it serves, as it may do, to enable snakes of different sexes to find each other, and also to guard the animal from attack when it is helpless from its power of offense having been temporarily exhausted.

No sufficient evidence has, however, been collected to show that any of these ingenious speculations affords us a real clew to the true cause of such a curious and elabo-

The Modern Freshmen.

The etiquette as to freshmen appears to be the same at both Oxford and Cambridge 'varsities; they must never leave a card on a senior man, but call till be is in, and on no account must they entertain seniors their first term, all invitations being returned after that is over. The outside world still fancies that the Verdant Green type is abundant, but alas, or perhaps for themselves, happily, it is all but gone, pub-lic schools and 'varsity crammers making a freshman as well able to take care of himself as most others, except, indeed, in the matter of running up bills, where nothing is of use but experience, and it is only one here and there who commits any breach of our unwritten laws-laws, however, as strict as ever were those of the Medes and Persians.-London Tit-Bits.

Always Lucky.

"What! a sensible person like yourself to have a horseshoe lying on the door step! Did it ever bring you good luck?"

"Certainly! Yesterday my taflor came to dun me for payment of his bill. On going away he stumbled over the horseshoe and broke his leg. Now he won't bother me again for a month at least."-Lustige
